

Karina Moskalenko is among the most outstanding human rights lawyers in the world, who has helped scores of victims in Russia fight for their rights in court. While contributing to building effective institutions like the International Protection Center, which she founded, and being a generous friend to many others, she is a one-woman force against impunity, and for justice.

Karina Moskalenko has insisted that Russian citizens have access to international standards of justice and has helped bring their cases to the European Court of Human Rights.

Her moral and intellectual powers and her humanistic personality are her gift, but also one to her society.

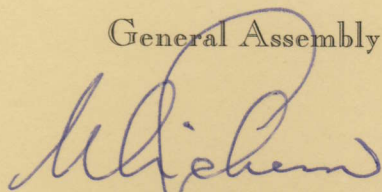

That gift deserves recognition, not persecution.
